Tim D – please share the same for the proposed Hill call.

Rosemary – the Green Group CEOs is already reflected from 4-5p on 5/11. We know this isn't moving.

Hi there –

We have two briefings tomorrow we need to get schedule. What times might work for these? And who can be the briefer?

1. Manchin staff – anytime in the afternoon
2. Capito/McConnell staff - 6pm/6:30pm would be ideal

Thanks!

May 9, 2023

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ADMINISTRATOR

FROM: Emma Tyler, OCIR//Ashley Morgan, OCIR

CC: Tim Del Monico, OCIR

SUBJECT: Phone Calls with Senator Ed Markey (D-MA) and
Congresswoman Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY-14)

CALL DATE: Tuesday, May 9, 2023

TIME: 3:00 PM – 4:00PM (Exact Timing TBD)

STAFFING: Emma Tyler, OCIR, Tim Del Monico, OCIR

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

YOU are scheduled to have calls with Senator Markey and Congresswoman Ocasio-Cortez to give them a heads up on the Clean Air Act Section 111 (b) and 111 (d) proposed rules (Power Plants Proposal). These proposals are scheduled to be announced on Thursday, May 11, 2023, when you give a speech at the University of Maryland.

KEY POINTS

- EPA is proposing new pollution standards that would reduce carbon dioxide from new and existing fossil-fuel fired power plants, delivering up to $85 billion in climate and public health benefits over the next two decades.

- This is a comprehensive proposal. Along with the 2015 limits for new coal-fired power plants, these proposed standards would ensure that natural gas- and coal-fired power plants, both new and existing, must incorporate consideration of carbon constraints into their plans.
- These are technology standards. In line with the Supreme Court’s decision on the Clean Power Plan, the emission limits and guidelines follow EPA’s traditional approach to control pollution from stationary sources. The proposal is based on technologies that are cost-effective and can be applied directly to power plants and seizes the momentum already underway in the power sector to move toward a cleaner future.
- This is a flexible proposal that allows power companies to meet the standards while maintaining reliability and without meaningfully increasing household electricity bills.
 - These proposals provide owners and operators of power plants with ample lead time and substantial compliance flexibilities, allowing power companies and grid operators to make sound long-term planning and investment decisions, while supporting the power sector’s ability to continue delivering reliable and affordable electricity.
 - EPA analysis found that the sector can maintain adequate resources to meet demand while complying with the proposed standards and without meaningfully increasing the average household’s monthly electricity bills.
 - EPA takes reliability concerns seriously and recently signed a memorandum of understanding with the Dept. of Energy to support grid reliability and resiliency as the agency advances efforts to reduce pollution, protect public health, and deliver environmental and economic benefits for all.
- The proposal for coal and new natural gas is expected to avoid up to 617 million metric tons of total carbon dioxide (CO₂) through 2042, and the proposed standard for existing natural gas is expected to avoid up to 407 million metric tons.

- This proposal would reduce carbon pollution and other harmful pollutants that endanger people's health.
 - Power plants emit a range of health-harming pollutants in addition to GHGs, including toxic air pollutants like mercury as well as pollutants that contribute to soot and smog.
 - EPA expects this proposal to cut tens of thousands of tons of harmful air pollutants like PM2.5, sulfur dioxide, and nitrogen oxide, especially in communities that for too long have disproportionately shouldered the burden of pollution. In 2030 alone, the proposed rules are expected to prevent 300,000 asthma attacks and 1,300 premature deaths.
- This action is part of a larger suite of regulatory actions that the Administrator announced over a year ago to fully address the climate, health, and environmental burdens from power plants, which all too often fall hardest on vulnerable or overburdened communities. Over the last few months, EPA:
 - issued a final "Good Neighbor Rule" to reduce smog-forming pollution from power plants and industrial facilities in 23 states;
 - proposed to strengthen standards for mercury and other hazardous air pollutants from coal-fired power plants;
 - proposed to strengthen limitations on wastewater discharges from power plants under the Clean Water Act; and
 - finalized a finding that it is "appropriate and necessary" to regulate hazardous air pollutants from power plants under the Clean Air Act, restoring the legal foundation for our Mercury and Air Toxics Standards
- The standards build on decades of technology advancements and momentum from recent changes in the sector.
 - Investments from BIL/IRA have already kicked off a clean energy and manufacturing boom across the country and build on years of progress advancing technologies like carbon capture and storage (CCS) and clean hydrogen.
 - The goal is to give the power sector more tools to deploy clean, affordable energy, take advantage of ready-to-go advanced pollution

- reduction technologies, and reduce energy costs for families and businesses.
- The proposal will reinforce the expected progress reducing GHG emissions from the power sector thanks to President Biden’s Inflation Reduction Act.
- Through this comprehensive approach to the power sector, we are both fulfilling EPA's responsibility to protect the public and communities from pollution and providing regulatory certainty and a long-term planning horizon that enables power companies, grid operators, and state regulators to continue providing reliable and affordable electricity.

TALKING POINTS

- Thank you for taking the time to speak with me today about EPA’s proposed power plant rules. I know this is an issue that is important to you, so I wanted to ensure you heard directly from me a couple of days in advance. Please keep this embargoed until Thursday, May 11th.
- EPA is excited for this historic proposed action to cut down and reduce green house gas emissions.
- As you know, our Agency was presented with specific direction from the Supreme Court following the West Virginia v. EPA decision. But I am proud of the team at EPA for their creativity to put together this proposal – which is one of the most significant public health rules in this country’s history.
- EPA expects this proposal to cut tens of thousands of tons of harmful air pollutants like PM2.5, sulfur dioxide, and nitrogen oxide, especially in communities that for too long have disproportionately shouldered the burden of pollution. In 2030 alone, the proposed rules are expected to prevent 300,000 asthma attacks and 1,300 premature deaths and delivering up to $85 billion in climate and public health benefits over the next two decades.

Call Sheet – Calls to Senator Markey and Congresswoman Ocasio-Cortez

- The proposal for coal and new natural gas is expected to avoid up to 617 million metric tons of total carbon dioxide (CO₂) through 2042, and the proposed standard for existing natural gas is expected to avoid up to 407 million metric tons.
- I'm proud that since I became Administrator, issued a suite of climate rules (proposed/final) that we estimate will achieve, each year, at least: tens of thousands of premature deaths avoided, hundreds of thousands of illnesses avoided, hundreds of hospital visits avoided, and tens of billions of dollars in health benefits.
- This proposal further amplifies EPA's mission to protect public health and the environment.
- Following Thursday's press conference, we need your help to share content on social media that will educate and engage young people around the climate action from President Biden and Congressional Democrats.
- Break Down the Announcement (VIDEO)
 - We know that proposed regulatory actions are often a bit confusing and can be complicated to understand. We want to make sure that everyday Americans – and especially young people who care deeply about environmental issues – understand what this announcement means and how it is an important step forward in our work on climate change.
 - Film a video of yourself explaining this action from EPA: what the proposed standards are, what it means for everyday Americans, and how it's helping to combat the climate crisis. And then post the video on your social media channels.
- Celebrate the Benefits of this Climate Action (SHARE / RETWEET)
 - @EPA and @EPAMichaelRegan will be posting graphics and videos throughout the day on Thursday, May 11 that highlight the benefits of the new proposed standards – from reducing greenhouse gas emissions to lowering public health risks.
 - Amplify these posts on your social media accounts to engage your audiences on how this action will impact them.

Is there a time on Wednesday that would work for a virtually meeting between the Administrator and the some combination of these members? We can start getting confirmations today and tomorrow.

Don't need to give them a whole lot in terms of substance to get them to commit to meeting with Administrator about an "upcoming climate speech".

Hannah, we should huddle about presentation for the members and specific asks for them.

We had a chat with the Administrator about ways to promote the Clean Power Rule. One idea is to engage some of the younger members of Congress with large social media followings i.e. Max Frost, AOC, etc.

Hi all,

It was great to meet you all earlier today! As we chatted about, EPA's proposed pollution standards for power plants presents us with an important opportunity to reach Americans on this Administration's work to tackle the climate crisis.

As leading voices on climate issues, Senator Markey and Congresswoman Ocasio Cortez play a crucial role in making this happen. Following Thursday's press conference, we'd love your help to share content on social media that will educate and engage young people on this climate action.

Below is more info on the announcement, including social media guidance, and attached are graphics. Thank you for all of your help, and please let us know if you have any questions!

Hannah

Embargoed until 5:00 AM ET on Thursday, May 11, 2023

EPA proposed new carbon pollution standards for fossil fuel-fired power plants to tackle the climate crisis and protect public health. These proposed standards would avoid over 600 million metric tons of CO₂ pollution, which is equivalent to reducing the annual emissions of roughly half the cars in the United States. This action will improve air quality by cutting harmful pollutants and deliver up to $85 billion in climate and public health benefits over the next two decades.

Below are key messages and social media posts for your considered amplification.

Digital Amplification

- We know that proposed regulatory actions are often a bit confusing and can be complicated to understand. We want to make sure that everyday Americans – and especially young people who care deeply about environmental issues – understand what this announcement means and how it is an important step forward in our work on climate change.
- SOCIAL MEDIA ASK: Film a video of yourself explaining this action from EPA: what the proposed standards are, what it means for everyday Americans, and how it's helping to combat the climate crisis.
- SOCIAL MEDIA ASK: Share content that celebrates the benefits of this climate action – from reducing greenhouse gas emissions to lowering public health risks. EPA (@EPA on Twitter and @EPAGov on Instagram) and Administrator Michael Regan (@EPAMichaelRegan on Twitter and Instagram) accounts will be sharing content throughout the day on Thursday, May 11.

Livestream at 9:30 AM ET: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TXz77CrSR0w>

Tune in as Administrator Michael Regan formally announces EPA's proposed pollution standards for power plants alongside students at the University of Maryland.

Example Social Media Posts:

- Excited to see this action from @EPA to tackle the climate crisis! These proposed standards for fossil fuel-fired power plants will cut climate pollution and improve air quality for communities across the country.
- Today @EPA proposed carbon pollution standards for power plants that will avoid over 600 million metric tons of CO₂ pollution. That's equivalent to reducing the annual emissions of half the cars in the U.S.!
- Today's announcement from EPA will improve air quality for communities in every corner of the United States. Cleaner air means less asthma attacks, fewer hospital visits, and less lost work and school days for all.
- All people deserve clean air to breathe. Proud of this action from @EPA to cut pollution from fossil fuel-fired power plants and protect people's health.

Key Messages and Background Info

- Today, EPA proposed standards for coal and new natural gas fired power plants that would avoid over 600 million metric tons of CO₂ pollution, while also preventing 300,000 asthma attacks and 1,300 premature deaths in 2030 alone.
- The proposal for coal and new natural gas power plants would avoid up to 617 million metric tons of total carbon dioxide (CO₂) through 2042, which is equivalent to reducing the annual emissions of 137 million passenger vehicles. (The equivalent to reducing the annual emissions of half the cars in the U.S.)
- Through 2042, EPA estimates the climate and health benefits of the standards on new gas and existing coal-fired power plants are up to $85 billion, an annual net benefit of up to roughly $6 billion.
- "By proposing new standards for fossil fuel-fired power plants, EPA is delivering on its mission to reduce harmful pollution that threatens people's health and wellbeing. EPA's proposal relies on proven, readily available technologies to limit carbon pollution and seizes the momentum already underway in the power sector to move toward a cleaner future. Alongside President Biden's historic investments in America, these proposals will help deliver tremendous benefits to the American people—cutting climate pollution and other harmful pollutants, protecting people's health, and driving American innovation." – Administrator Michael S. Regan.
- The proposed limits and guidelines require ambitious reductions in carbon pollution based on proven and cost-effective control technologies that can be applied directly to power plants.
- The technology-based standards EPA is proposing include:
 - Strengthening the current New Source Performance Standards (NSPS) for newly built fossil fuel-fired stationary combustion turbines (generally natural gas-fired)
 - Establishing emission guidelines for states to follow in limiting carbon pollution from existing fossil fuel-fired steam generating EGUs (including coal, oil and natural gas-fired units)
 - Establishing emission guidelines for large, frequently used existing fossil fuel-fired stationary combustion turbines (generally natural gas-fired)
- In 2030 alone, the proposed standards would prevent: approximately 1,300 premature deaths; more than 800 hospital and emergency room visits; more than 300,000 cases of asthma attacks; 38,000 school absence days; and 66,000 lost workdays.
- The proposal requires that states, in developing plans for existing sources, undertake meaningful engagement with affected stakeholders, including communities disproportionately burdened by pollution and climate change impacts, as well as energy communities, where historic resources are now available through President Biden's Investing in America agenda to deploy new technologies that can help clean up the electric power sector, support energy workers and spur long-term economic revitalization.
- The President's Investing in America agenda gives the power sector more tools to deploy clean, affordable energy, take advantage of ready-to-go advanced pollution reduction technologies, and reduce energy costs for families and businesses.
- EPA will take comment on these proposals for 60 days after publication in the Federal Register. EPA will also hold a virtual public hearing and will make additional information available on the website.

EPA is proposing new pollution standards for fossil fuel-fired power plants

EPA's proposed pollution standards for fossil fuel-fired power plants will avoid over 600 million tons of CO₂ *

That's equivalent to reducing the annual emissions of half the cars in the U.S.*

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ADMINISTRATOR

FROM: Emma Tyler, OCIR

CC: Tim Del Monico, OCIR

SUBJECT: Phone Calls with Senator Ed Markey (D-MA) and
Congresswoman Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY-14)

CALL DATE: Tuesday, May 9, 2023

TIME: 3:00 PM – 4:00PM (Exact Timing TBD)

STAFFING: Emma Tyler, OCIR, Tim Del Monico, OCIR

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

YOU are scheduled to have calls with Senator Markey and Senator Casey to give them a heads up on the Clean Air Act Section 111 (b) and 111 (d) proposed rules (Power Plants Proposal). These proposals are scheduled to be announced on Thursday, May 11, 2023, when you give a speech at the University of Maryland.

KEY POINTS

- EPA is proposing new pollution standards that would reduce carbon dioxide from new and existing fossil-fuel fired power plants, delivering up to $85 billion in climate and public health benefits over the next two decades.

- The proposal for coal and new natural gas is expected to avoid up to 617 million metric tons of total carbon dioxide (CO₂) through 2042, and the proposed standard for existing natural gas is expected to avoid up to 407 million metric tons.
- This proposal would reduce carbon pollution and other harmful pollutants that endanger people's health.
 - Power plants emit a range of health-harming pollutants in addition to GHGs, including toxic air pollutants like mercury as well as pollutants that contribute to soot and smog.
 - EPA expects this proposal to cut tens of thousands of tons of harmful air pollutants like PM_{2.5}, sulfur dioxide, and nitrogen oxide, especially in communities that for too long have disproportionately shouldered the burden of pollution. In 2030 alone, the proposed rules are expected to prevent 300,000 asthma attacks and 1,300 premature deaths.
- This is a comprehensive proposal. Along with the 2015 limits for new coal-fired power plants, these proposed standards would ensure that natural gas- and coal-fired power plants, both new and existing, must incorporate consideration of carbon constraints into their plans.
- These are technology standards. In line with the Supreme Court's decision on the Clean Power Plan, the emission limits and guidelines follow EPA's traditional approach to control pollution from stationary sources. The proposal is based on technologies that are cost-effective and can be applied directly to power plants and seizes the momentum already underway in the power sector to move toward a cleaner future.
- This is a flexible proposal that allows power companies to meet the standards while maintaining reliability and without meaningfully increasing household electricity bills.
 - These proposals provide owners and operators of power plants with ample lead time and substantial compliance flexibilities, allowing power companies and grid operators to make sound long-term planning and

- investment decisions, while supporting the power sector’s ability to continue delivering reliable and affordable electricity.
 - EPA analysis found that the sector can maintain adequate resources to meet demand while complying with the proposed standards and without meaningfully increasing the average household’s monthly electricity bills.
 - EPA takes reliability concerns seriously and recently signed a memorandum of understanding with the Dept. of Energy to support grid reliability and resiliency as the agency advances efforts to reduce pollution, protect public health, and deliver environmental and economic benefits for all.
- This action is part of a larger suite of regulatory actions that the Administrator announced over a year ago to fully address the climate, health, and environmental burdens from power plants, which all too often fall hardest on vulnerable or overburdened communities. Over the last few months, EPA:
 - issued a final "Good Neighbor Rule" to reduce smog-forming pollution from power plants and industrial facilities in 23 states;
 - proposed to strengthen standards for mercury and other hazardous air pollutants from coal-fired power plants;
 - proposed to strengthen limitations on wastewater discharges from power plants under the Clean Water Act; and
 - finalized a finding that it is "appropriate and necessary" to regulate hazardous air pollutants from power plants under the Clean Air Act, restoring the legal foundation for our Mercury and Air Toxics Standards
- The standards build on decades of technology advancements and momentum from recent changes in the sector and dovetails with the Inflation Reduction Act and the Bipartisan Infrastructure law.
 - These new proposals come on the heels of the President securing the largest climate investments in history. These investments have already kicked off a clean energy and manufacturing boom across the country and build on years of progress advancing technologies like carbon capture and storage (CCS) and clean hydrogen.

- The President’s Invest in America agenda gives the power sector more tools to deploy clean, affordable energy, take advantage of ready-to-go advanced pollution reduction technologies, and reduce energy costs for families and businesses.
 - The proposal will reinforce the expected progress reducing GHG emissions from the power sector thanks to President Biden’s Inflation Reduction Act.
- Through this comprehensive approach to the power sector, we are both fulfilling EPA's responsibility to protect the public and communities from pollution and providing regulatory certainty and a long-term planning horizon that enables power companies, grid operators, and state regulators to continue providing reliable and affordable electricity.
- Thank you for taking the time to speak with me today about EPA’s proposed power plant rules. I know this is an issue that is important to you, so I wanted to ensure you heard directly from me.
- EPA is excited for this historic proposed action to cut down and reduce greenhouse gas emissions.
- As you know, our Agency was presented with specific direction from the Supreme Court following the West Virginia v. EPA decision. But I am proud of the team at EPA for their creativity to put together this proposal – which is one of the most significant public health rules in this country’s history.
- EPA expects this proposal to cut tens of thousands of tons of harmful air pollutants like PM2.5, sulfur dioxide, and nitrogen oxide, especially in communities that for too long have disproportionately shouldered the burden of pollution. In 2030 alone, the proposed rules are expected to prevent 300,000 asthma attacks and 1,300 premature deaths and delivering up to $85 billion in climate and public health benefits over the next two decades.

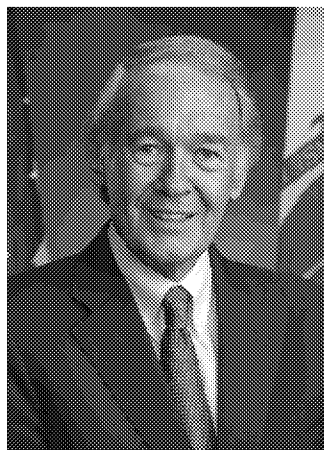

Call Sheet – Calls to Senator Markey and Congresswoman Ocasio-Cortez

- The proposal for coal and new natural gas is expected to avoid up to 617 million metric tons of total carbon dioxide (CO₂) through 2042, and the proposed standard for existing natural gas is expected to avoid up to 407 million metric tons.
- I'm proud that since I became Administrator, we have issued proposed or final rules that we estimate will achieve, each year, at least: tens of thousands of premature deaths avoided, hundreds of thousands of illnesses avoided, hundreds of hospital visits avoided, and tens of billions of dollars in health benefits.
- This proposal further amplifies EPA's mission to protect public health and the environment.
- Before we wrap up this conversation, I could use your help to amplify this historic announcement on Thursday!

Hi there –

We have two briefings tomorrow we need to get schedule. What times might work for these? And who can be the briefer?

1. Manchin staff – anytime in the afternoon
2. Capito/McConnell staff - 6pm/6:30pm would be ideal

Thanks!

Maria and Tim C – please summarize the proposed press asks in priority order, and include ideal dates/times – noting these will have to have maximum flexibility for 5/9 and 5/10.

Tim D – please share the same for the proposed Hill call.

Rosemary – the Green Group CEOs is already reflected from 4-5p on 5/11. We know this isn't moving.
